

Making Good Men Better

In a Masonic Lodge, the President of the United States would be considered equal to the newest member. When Washington, Truman, or the Roosevelts sat in Lodge, they were addressed as Brother. Everyone is "on the level" and is judged by how he lives in the community and upholds the tenets of the Fraternity. As long as he is "on the square" with his brethren, he will be well regarded.

History of Blendon Lodge

With ten charter members, Blendon Lodge No. 339 was established in Westerville, Ohio on October 21st, 1862. The lodge had been operating for the previous eight months with the permission of the Grand Lodge of Ohio. Abraham Lincoln was the president and the Civil War was in its second year. The population of Westerville was about 700.

Corner Stone Laid

The cornerstone for the Temple was laid in February of 1930 with a large procession of Masons who moved through the streets of Westerville to the new Temple site. A time capsule in the design of a casket was deposited containing records, papers and other interesting objects. Following the ceremony, the Masons and others attending moved to the auditorium of the Westerville High School, one block north, where an oration was delivered.
